

From Kent to Kenya

If you've been one of our donors over the last few months you could well be part of our 100th shipment of computers to Africa. Computers have been donated from across the UK with Kent as our biggest provider. Our 100th shipment will depart from Kent full of enough IT equipment to help over 15 schools in Kenya. In other words, about additional 12,216 students will be impacted within the first year. Kent's generosity is greatly transforming education in Africa.

"We are delighted to send this historic shipment; despite the economic obscurity, we have seen the generosity and environmental wisdom of our Kent locals, businesses and schools", explains Lowri Turner of Computers 4 Africa. "The impact on education is remarkable, e-books, the internet, international resources can provide an incomparable resource, and in turn our Kent community enjoys the good feeling of being socially responsible and caring for our environment" she explains.

Each one of our shipments represents the collective effort of each of our supporters. By the end of 2012, we hope to complete another 5 shipments. In the UK, we can't imagine our lives without computers; we use them in almost everything we do, and we can definitely say IT technology has greatly improved our lives. By donating our used computers, instead of disposing of them, we give this same opportunity to people in Africa to have better opportunities in life.

Editor:

Computers 4 Africa transforms communities across Africa, by accepting working redundant PC's and IT equipment from individuals, corporates and organisations in the U.K; once securely data wiped, the computers are then ship out to schools, colleges, libraries, clinics and specific projects in Africa.
